

The First Presidents

To preserve the values and principles that our great Republic was founded upon, we must remain ever vigilant and educated in the stories and lessons from the lives of our earliest leaders. To reinforce the foundation of our Constitution and its liberties, we must understand the narratives of our founding leaders, discern their triumphs and failures, and apply their wisdom to the challenges we face today.

Running blindly into the future without the guidance of those who went before you would be foolish. Today, many Americans are unaware of the stories that showed our founding fathers' humanity. These stories help us to ascertain the motivations that inspired their choices and perspectives. Knowing these motivations allows us to reshape our worldview and better address the challenges of our modern age.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » Presidential Precedents
- » Turned Astray – Politics over Principle
- » Modern Advice from the First Presidents

YOUR MISSION: Learn about the lives and choices of the first seven Presidents and translate their leadership into lessons for modern governance and citizenship to uphold the integrity of our nation's founding principles, safeguard our liberties, and ensure adherence to the Constitution.

⚠ ATTENTION: Our nation's first presidents set both good and bad precedents for the nation's future. We must return to the good ones and do away with the bad.

WHY YOU SHOULD CARE

- » The first seven presidents set the course for the nation and the lessons that can be learned from their stories can help us set the course for the next few generations.
- » We are in a 1776 moment, one that will be remembered by future generations as a contentious time in history where the decisions made have lasting consequences.
- » The rights imbued upon you by your Creator are under attack by a government that wants to play god.
- » The mistakes and flaws of some of our earliest leaders can be studied to prevent their reoccurrence.
- » Knowing what happened in history is informational, but true, actionable knowledge requires an understanding of why and how history played out as it did, especially when analyzing the choices made by individuals.

Ep. 8-287 (OSINT) Open-Sourced Intelligence Report. This briefing includes a conversation between Kevin Freeman and Tim Barton. Tim is a friend of the Economic War Room® and a patriot.

Tim Barton is the President of WallBuilders and spends countless hours researching the truth of America's founding and exposing the lies regarding our history that currently permeate our society. Tim's ability to tell the story of America's past, while helping audiences understand how that connects to the present and what steps should be taken for the future, has inspired audiences nationwide. He is also a contributor for the Epoch Times, and a frequent guest on numerous television and radio programs.

1. Presidential Precedents

The First Seven Presidents (George Washington, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe, John Quincy Adams, and Andrew Jackson) set the course for our young nation. Understanding their stories and leadership styles is paramount to grasping the origins of our Republic.

Each president had a different impact on the trajectory of the nation. George Washington is upheld as the “Indispensable Man,” while Andrew Jackson, despite his early military prowess, is critiqued for weaponizing politics and setting a negative precedent.

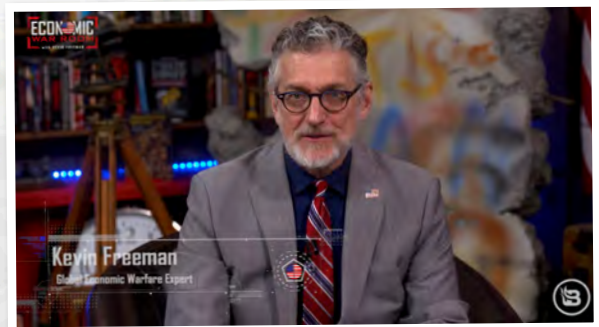

“The first seven presidents are the ones that ... direct the trajectory of the nation... They established our republic on the foundation of the Constitution and its liberties... some of them did a really good job, whether it be George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, or John Quincy Adams. And then some of them, like James Monroe or Andrew Jackson, did devastating things. Andrew Jackson single-handedly changed the entire political structure, weaponizing politics, weaponizing the US government against his political opponents.” –Tim Barton

All seven of these first presidents served in the Revolutionary War. They understood the power of miracles, as victory in a war against the greatest empire the world had ever seen seemed impossible.

Due to their faith, the premise that divine providence grants human rights was fundamental to the founding ethos, where leadership sought to restrain governmental power to protect these inalienable rights. “To secure these rights, governments exist among men.”

“I think of the French Revolution going on about the same time as the American Revolution. One was God-centered, the other was godless... And you can see the outcomes from the disparate systems. And Washington was right. Liberty only works in the context of Christ, where you have an overarching authority, God.” –Kevin Freeman

George Washington famously stepped down after two terms as president which set the precedent for most US presidents that followed him. This act alone prevented the nation from falling back into monarchy and losing the constitution. This was Washington's way of submitting government to the people so their right to vote would not be infringed.

In Washington's farewell address, he provided future leaders of the nation with wisdom, and warnings, to help guide them, and the American people down the right path.

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports." –George Washington

It was essential, in the eyes of Washington, that the nation remain a spiritual and moral beacon on a hill.

Even more than Washington, Thomas Jefferson upheld strict constitutional adherence, arguing the government should only execute powers expressly granted, a stark contrast to modern expansive federal overreach.

⚠ Attention: In the eyes of the first presidents, America depended upon God and morality for its success as a nation, as all the rights of the people came from God, not the government.

2. Turned Astray – Politics over Principle

The strict adherence to the Constitution, enjoyed under the terms of the first presidents, began to deteriorate as the stories of some of the other presidents carried less of the moral virtues that were seen in those who went before them.

While there were times when Jefferson and Washington disagreed on how situations were to be handled and what powers were available to be used, ultimately, both stood to defend the Constitution and uphold the value of individual liberty.

These disagreements extended to John Quincy Adams and James Monroe who held differing views on slavery. Adams was vehemently opposed to slavery and had devoted much of his life to abolitionist movements. Monroe, on the other hand, was the first president to allow pro-slavery states to join the union.

James Monroe's endorsement of pro-slavery states and Andrew Jackson's radical political weaponization marked a pivot away from initial constitutional fidelity, steering the Republic toward contentious waters.

“Andrew Jackson single-handedly changed the entire political structure, weaponizing politics, weaponizing the US government against his political opponents. And he changed the foundation from what George Washington did. Modern politics today is a greater reflection of Andrew Jackson than any other president.” –Tim Barton

Andrew Jackson was potentially the greatest war hero since Washington as his leadership during the War of 1812 likely saved the Union from total defeat. His incredible military prowess won multiple battles throughout the war and prevented the British invasion of Louisiana.

His heroics, however, have been overshadowed by his violent and war-like tendencies.

Where Washington had managed to put down his sword and learn to lead the nation through peacetime, Jackson could not rid himself of the war posture in which he had been raised.

Jackson's military brain muddled his political career as he viewed those who held political opposition as enemies, not as brothers who disagreed. This perspective became the breeding ground for modern politics where people spit on the other side of the aisle.

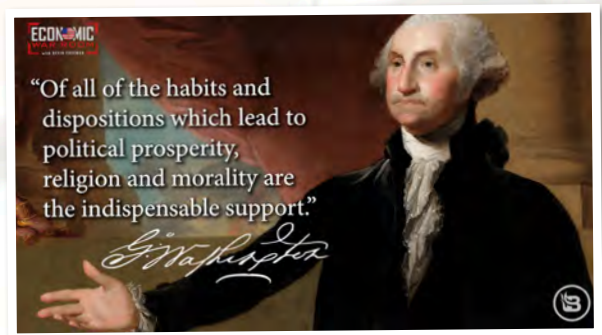

While Jackson did much good by dismantling the central bank and getting the nation out of debt, his blatant disregard for the constitutional authority of the other branches and his militaristic view on leadership pulled the country off course.

⚠ Attention: Washington warned against political parties and infighting. Jackson and the modern political climate serve as evidence of Washington's wise words unfortunately unheeded.

3. Modern Advice from the First Presidents

Taking into account the successes and failures of the earliest Presidents of our nation, it is clear they would have much advice for us as a people today.

Washington's original wisdom and warnings in his farewell address emphasized the importance of avoiding foreign entanglements, putting principles above party politics, and ensuring the government's role remained as the protector of God-given rights and freedoms.

Today, the Biden Administration is sending billions of dollars to other nations and getting involved in every global conflict, while American citizens struggle to put food on the table and military veterans live on the streets.

Even worse, many politicians on the left have questioned the idea that rights are God-given, attributing rights to the government. If they were to come from the government, then the government could take them away.

This would infuriate all seven of the first Presidents as they understood the dangers such a perspective would pose.

“I think they would look at Biden and they might call him King George the Fourth... Go back and read the Declaration and all of the reasons they thought we should separate from the King of England. It's what we're doing in America right now... there's a divine creator and He gave rights to man, and government shall protect those rights... they start listing all the ways the King was violating those rights. And if we look at what the federal government is doing and violating our rights according to what the Founding Fathers understood, our God-given rights... we are seeing that violated in so many respects.” –Tim Barton

The wisdom of our first presidents was in their submission to God and the people. The Government was understood to be a body of men serving their nation, not ruling it.

They understood the necessity for moral and spiritual leadership, in service to the nation. Without moral governance, any nation will crumble. This morality, for the sake of Liberty, must come from faith in God who is good and blesses His people with these unalienable rights.

Tim Barton does not think the founders would demand a second revolution, they would instead point out that We the People voted for this nonsense, which means we can vote out this nonsense.

Attention: The first presidents of our nation provided great wisdom and moral leadership, they would want modern Americans to do the same and vote for virtuous leaders.
