

Stolen (Promised) Land

America is a union of states who mutually agree to work together with each other and the federal government is supposed to serve the states toward common goals. The founders intended for the federal government to be limited in power so that the local and state governments, those closest to the people, would have the most power. This led to agreements on how much land in each state could be federally owned and controlled. Most of the nation enjoys these agreements as states own 95% or more of their own land... except the West where some states own less than half of their own land. This is not only unfair, but it also leads to major mismanagement of vast portions of beautiful American soil.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » American Lands Council
- » Federal Land Control
- » Federal Mismanagement
- » The Local Solution
- » The Financialization of Nature

YOUR MISSION: Understand the threat posed by Federal control of land that should be managed by state and local governments and get involved in the fight to free the land.

⚠ ATTENTION: The Federal government controls vast amounts of American land and it is failing to manage that land properly.

Ep. 7-248 (OSINT) Open-Sourced Intelligence Report. This briefing includes a conversation between Kevin Freeman, Jennifer Fielder, and Ken Ivory. Jennifer and Ken are friends of the Economic War Room® and American Patriots. Jennifer Fielder is the CEO of the American Lands Council (ALC). Jennifer served in the Montana State Senate. Ken Ivory serves in the Utah legislature. He co-founded ALC. Kevin worked with Ken when he consulted for the Utah Federal Funds Risk Commission.

American Lands Council

The American Lands Council exists to provide “a lawful, peaceful path to better, more accountable management of public lands and natural resources.”

Wildfires and other natural disasters can often be prevented by the regular and proper management of the land.

American Lands Council aims to return this responsibility to those who deserve to hold it, the people who live there. State and Local governments should decide how to best serve the public with land inside their borders. The federal government should be limited in its control of land in each state.

1. Federal Land Control

Currently, federally managed lands make up approximately 640 million acres. This is about 28% of the 2.27 billion acres of American land.

Worse than this, federal control of land is not even remotely similar between states.

- » The 11 western states see over 45% of their land being managed by the federal government (Nevada being the highest at over 80%).
- » Over 60% of the land in Alaska is under federal control.
- » However, in the rest of the nation, the federal government controls less than 5% of the land.

! WARNING: Where the federal government controls the land, the people who live near it have less control over land that has a measurable impact on their daily lives.

The disparity between the eastern and western portions of the nation is unfair. States like Florida fought for the right to own and manage land within their own borders and won.

“In Utah, we have 63% federally controlled land that is non-taxable. We only have 20% taxable land in Utah. So, as we started to look at that, county commissioners came together. They were very concerned. We learned that our statehood promises were exactly the same for all the states East and West. The federal government just wasn’t honoring the same promise.” –Ken Ivory

Ken Ivory founded the American Lands Council to help the Western states coordinate and fight for equal control of their land in the same manner that Florida fought for theirs.

This would allow local communities to protect themselves from preventable natural disasters. The people who live near these massive pieces of federally controlled land are forced to live in fear of wildfires and other disasters without any ability to lead the management of the land in a sustainable manner that benefits the local community and ensures their safety.

2. Federal Mismanagement

One of the main reasons these communities often live in fear is the federal mismanagement of the land.

Western states are often hit by wildfires, some of which could have been prevented with sustainable forestry practices. If these large forests are not regularly logged with the debris cleared, they can become dry and dead. The forests that have more dry, dead wood in them are far more susceptible to forest fires that threaten the local communities.

“The federal government is the worst. Landlord states are outperforming the federal government economically by 10 to 1 or better on average, when it comes to public land management. State forests are healthier, they’re more fire resilient. We get into those lands and take good care of them when they need to be taken care of. And the federal government has basically put hundreds of millions of acres into what we call a lock it up and let it burn status.” – Jennifer Fielder

Instead of managing healthy forests, the Federal government locks up the land and prevents anyone else from coming in to care for it. The Federal government does not properly fund the management of the land, nor does it understand how to manage the land in a way that is most beneficial for the local communities.

The difference between federally and locally managed land can be clearly seen in the image below.

Jennifer Fielder explains that this image captures “a property line that divides the ownership right down the center... you can see on the left side, the forest is mostly dead, diseased, dying timber. And on the right side, you see a more healthy forest. The difference is not climate change. The difference is management.”

She continues to explain that “the left side is owned and controlled by the federal government. It’s been neglected and it’s become an extremely high fire risk. It’s a huge liability, both economically and environmentally.”

In contrast, on the right side of the image, “you see the locally controlled side of that picture... it’s a healthy working forest that’s been periodically logged, it’s had timber managed on it, it’s healthier, it’s more resilient to wildfire, and it’s actually an asset both economically and environmentally.”

Attention: Federally controlled lands are often being neglected which can have disastrous effects on the environment and local communities whose safety depends on the health of the land.

3. The Local Solution

To solve these issues, the American Lands Council wants to hand the reins back to the people who live near the land.

Most of the federally controlled land in these western states needs to be returned to the state and local governments who know how these lands can best be managed to serve their communities.

This is not a mission to privatize the land but to shift the management of public lands that should remain public. The goal is to make this land healthier, safer, and more economically sustainable for the American people.

“This would be the greatest economic renaissance on par since the Louisiana Purchase. Kevin, we’re talking about 30% more land than the Louisiana Purchase that is locked up. Like Jennifer said, it’s locked up in a museum, left to die. So, our forests are burning at the rate of 10 million acres a year. And so now watersheds are destroyed... The number one source of PM 2.5 pollution is wildfire. It’s the emissions from wildfires that are like lighting an oil refinery on fire. So no, we live here. And those whose lives and livelihoods depend upon the care and quality of the land. They know how to care for the land. But when you get managers in from New Jersey and New York that are here for 18 months and rotate it out, our lands are really being loved to death. They’re being destroyed. And environmentally alone, this is a catastrophe that is completely preventable.” –Ken Ivory

If states and local governments were to manage these lands, many disasters that destroy our environment, kill ecosystems, and threaten American lives could be avoided. The people who care most about land are those who live on or near it, they understand it and can best care for it.

These proposed changes would allow the local people to profit from the more sustainable management of their area.

- » Logging companies who use sustainable forestry practices would profit and the local economies would benefit.
- » Local environmental organizations would have more influence on land use and could improve tourist attractions.
- » Preventative measures would save disaster relief and first responder expenses leading to more economic growth.
- » States and local governments would get revenue from the land instead of the federal government taking that money far away.

Attention: The return of land management to state and local governments would lead to massive improvements in environmental, social, and economic sustainability.

4. The Financialization of Nature

Instead of giving states fair and equal treatment, the Biden administration is working toward a dystopian future where the federal government and big corporations work together to make money off the land.

“Fascism should more properly be called corporatism because it is the merger of state and corporate power.” –Benito Mussolini, Italian Dictator

Ken Ivory explains that “It’s all pushing toward this latest big financialization of nature, the commoditization of nature.” This is being done through a combination of:

- » Biden’s first executive order 14008, which was designed to lock up the land, focus on de-carbonization, and track the social cost of greenhouse gasses.
- » The SEC Scope 3 rule which will track the carbon emissions of American companies.
- » The new Bureau of Land Management (BLM) Public Lands Rule would grant them the ability to lease nature for non-use or conservation. This would be used by companies to offset their carbon emissions.

The World Economic Forum, BlackRock, and others are estimating that this market, the financialization or commoditization of nature, is in the thousands of trillions of dollars. This is a major money-making scheme where they sell a form of carbon indulgences that 'sinful' carbon-emitting businesses will have to purchase to offset their crimes of pollution.

Ultimately this scheme will grant the Woke Elite more power as they can siphon funds out of carbon-emitting companies, stripping shareholders of their profits.

These funds will inevitably end up in the hands of Woke puppet masters who want to control the world and make the people dependent on them.

Attention: Woke policy is making way for public lands, owned by the American people, to be used as carbon indulgences to punish American companies and their shareholders.
