

Growing Up: A Farming Solution

From the early cradle of civilization to Man's first steps on the moon, farming has been an essential aspect of daily life. Without farming there would never be enough food to sustain any form of civilized life. Even in underdeveloped nations, subsistence farming sustains many people and consumes most of their waking hours. Throughout human history, new technologies have provided incredible improvements to agricultural outputs or labor costs.

Hand plows were replaced by Ox-driven plows. Horses were replaced by tractors, and now even seeds have been replaced with genetically modified organics (GMO) that boast higher yields and more resistant plants that can survive harsher conditions.

Concerningly, however, ESG mandates and a host of threats have emerged regarding the food supply. In addition, some technology may also be detrimental to food security. We need more food than ever before. And we need better quality. How can we get there?

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » Food & The Economic War
- » Agria – A Vertical Food Solution
- » Hydroponics vs Agria – Vertical Farming Showdown

YOUR MISSION: Learn about the threats to our food and the Agria solution for beyond organic farming.

 ATTENTION: Our food is being weaponized against us, what is the best way to fight back?

Ep. 7-278 (OSINT) Open-Sourced Intelligence Report. This briefing includes a conversation between Kevin Freeman and William Layton. William is a friend of the Economic War Room® and an American Patriot.

William started growing giant pumpkins in 2007 and set the state record at 1,138 lbs. William then invented a new way to grow truly organic fruits and vegetables with no fertilizers or pesticides chemicals, on a commercial scale, year-round, anywhere in the world.

1. Food & The Economic War

From the Stone Age to the Space Age, there is one resource that has always been the target of economic warfare, food.

When Rome was sacked by barbarians, they besieged the city and prevented access to food until the starving citizens surrendered.

Many empires have used their control over food supply to force other nations, or enslaved people groups, to submit to their rule.

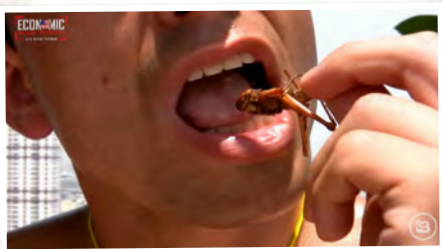

“Over the long history of humanity, this is the number one economic weapon, and it was the first economic weapon ever used. Empires have been toppled over this topic. People have been enslaved because of it. This is perhaps the most basic of human needs and thus personal vulnerabilities. It is one of the major weapons in the arsenal of Liberty’s enemies, both foreign and domestic. I’m talking about food and food insecurity. You know, Esau sold his birthright for this. Joseph saved the world, and then he enslaved a nation with it. People have killed for it and started wars over it. Even the Arab Spring was the result of food insecurity... A manipulation of the food supply can be used to control people... Just over the past year or so, we’ve seen some very strange things happen in regard to food.” –Kevin Freeman

Over the last few decades, farming has changed drastically as genetically modified plants, made by mega-corporations have been introduced to the food supply and have quickly overtaken organic farming.

While these products are far more efficient and have many advantages over their organic counterparts, the introduction of GMO farming has been attributed by some for the rise in allergies and gut biome diseases.

“Massive corporations control our food supply today, and for the most part, they’re looking for the profit incentive. They’re not looking to feed their families with it. They’re looking to see how they can maximize profits, which means shortcuts and chemicals and things like that. And there are these crackdowns on things like raw milk and Amish farmers who’ve had their livelihoods destroyed because they dared to share meat outside of state or federal authorization. They thought they’d followed the law with a club of owners. No wonder farmers are selling out to Bill Gates and China. Do you really think this federal and big business takeover of our food supply is beneficial? The gut biome. Our guts are being harmed by the excessive processing of food and food allergies and less nutrition. Why? It’s money and control. This is economic warfare.” –Kevin Freeman

Is this is all part of a much larger agenda? The WEF, Bill Gates, China, and many other globalists are working to control the world’s food supply so that they can control the people.

“Then there’s the transition to eat bugs that the World Economic Forum wants to do. They’ve already introduced it into your diet. You know, the Bible prohibits eating bugs except for locust. Even organic foods are under attack via regulation and big money interests. There’s this appeal by Bill Gates where they put a fake coating on fruit to make it last longer. You know, a McDonald’s hamburger stays preserved for 20 years. And we think that’s gross. Now they want to make our fresh fruit that never rots due to the addition of chemicals. Is it really fresh? Lots of people are concerned about this.” –Kevin Freeman

Eating bugs and plastic apples is obviously not appealing to the average American. But this is just one way the globalists are attacking farming.

Bill Gates and Chinese companies are rapidly buying up farmland and pastures. Are their actions in the best interest of the American people?

With control of the farming industry, the globalist elites could fabricate famine, or remove specific products, like beef, from our diet to push their tyrannical agendas in the name of protecting the environment. Farmers the world over are fed up with their interference.

The American food supply has generally been in the hands of American families who work hard to provide food for the nation and the world, but the shift to corporate-controlled farming threatens to rob farming of humanity.

Attention: The American food supply is under attack as food becomes less nutritious, more processed, and more controlled by globalist elites.

3. Agria – One Vertical Food Solution

William Layton took up farming as a hobby as he became interested in giant pumpkin competitions. He succeeded in growing a pumpkin to 1,138 pounds, a state record at the time.

As he continued in his hobby, he noticed that using fertilizer and the recommended chemicals was ruining his crops.

“In the Bible, it tells you where God told King Solomon how to get rid of the enemies. At the end he says, ‘Salt the land.’ The Greeks did it, the Romans did it, and with their enemies. Fertilizers contain salts. So, when you put fertilizer on your land, there’s salts and chemicals and stuff in there that can kill all the microbiology in the soil.” –William Layton

This inspired William's search for a better way to farm which ended in a deeper study of nature.

There are many places on earth where the plants we eat grow naturally, and in great abundance. William wanted to understand how this was possible in nature without fertilizers or chemicals.

“The way I grow, everything's controlled agriculture indoors. But because my plants are getting everything that nature intended them to get, their defenses kick in, which repel bugs and stuff, the natural defenses. Where they're growing with fertilizer and chemicals, the plants are only barely getting enough to finish up. That's why they're less nutritional. Your average tomato right now is 60% less nutritional than when we were kids. So, by tapping into everything that the plant needs, I don't need any GMOs or anything. I've grown tomato plants, 24-, 25-foot tall, cabbage, everything the way nature intended it to grow... I was working with a college at the time... they told me I'd never grow a strawberry bigger than the tip of my finger... And I'm like, what kind of scientists are these? I've already been growing strawberries as big as the palm of my hand. And after I showed them, they were pretty mad that a guy with no college education could show up a whole staff of agricultural scientists.” –William Layton

After studying nature and the microbiology found in soil, William began inoculating his growing media with an abundance of microbiology greater than what is typically found in nature.

After years of testing, he developed the Agria growing system to function at extremely high efficiency while producing greater yields with more nutritional produce than traditional farming methods.

Unlike other farming methods, the Agria growing system uses no chemicals at all, making their produce beyond organic.

“I’ve grown strawberries in the same growing medium now for 13 years. We never change out the growing media. We’re able to grow crop after crop with less labor, less energy, less water. It’s a far superior taste to hydroponics or anything being able to produce. And it’s a high-density growing system that allows us to grow vertically or in any situation... in my Agria growing system, I’ve grown over 170 different varieties of plants... You name it, we’re able to grow it. We’ve grown all the tomatoes, cucumbers, any kind of vegetable you can think of root crops, potatoes, beets, you name it. We’ve grown it... Some of the restaurants we’re selling to back in Lynchburg, Virginia, are telling us their shelf life is tremendous compared to the garbage they’re buying from these other companies.” –William Layton

Not only does this system work better, the growing media does not need to be replaced or re-fertilized every year.

Because of the technology of nature, the Agria system sustains the soil between harvests so farmers can replant the same growing media and simply add water to watch their new seeds grow.

⚠ Attention: The Agria growing system produces higher quantities and higher qualities of produce that taste better, last longer, and provide more nutrition than the produce in the grocery store.

3. Hydroponics vs Agria – Vertical Farming Showdown

The current fad for growing produce is hydroponics, a system in which plants are grown in water that is fertilized by either fish or chemicals.

In most cases, hydroponics requires consistent care and many different chemicals to ensure the plants grow properly. Often, this can make the process expensive.

“We’re not hydroponics whatsoever. Hydroponics, I call them, my nickname for them is, chemical soup. Who wants to eat anything grown in a vat of chemical soup? I invented a sustainable growing system. Hydroponics, you grow one crop, and you throw all the growing media and everything away. Start again.” –William Layton

In hydroponics, if you don’t have a natural source of fish, the system will require chemicals. This is especially the case for vertical hydroponics systems.

Many Americans are shifting away from genetically modified foods, pesticides, and other chemicals.

The current standard for hydroponic growing systems does not provide the level of organic produce that the American people desire.

The American people want chemical-free food that tastes good and is rich in nutritional value.

The Agria growing system grows this produce by multiplying the fertility of nature instead of creating man-made replacements for it.

“Inoculation is where I take an inert, growing media that’s dead and lifeless, and I inoculate with my biology, and it becomes living. But I’m inoculating at a scale three times what you find in nature. So now the plant, you put it in the growing media, it’s all you can eat buffet. That’s why I’m getting incredible growth, faster growth, more beautiful plants, and everything... We tried to grow a media out of the dust, added water, and the microbiology, and everything in there just went dormant. As soon as you add water, it comes right back and we put the strawberries and tomatoes in, and they’re just as pretty as if we hadn’t done that at all. So, this is a fully sustainable growing system.” –William Layton

Hydroponics and all other forms of farming require specific conditions for the growing media to stay fertile. New chemicals have to be introduced after a harvest to provide for the needs of the next set of plants.

Tests of the Agria growing system have shown that if the growing media is inoculated and the soil dries out, the microbiology simply goes dormant. When water is reintroduced to the growing media, the microbiology springs back to life.

This makes the Agria growing system more sustainable than other systems on the market as the growing media maintains its fertility over the years and simply requires water.

The Agria growing system is also designed for indoor vertical farming which allows for better temperature and atmospheric control of the greenhouse and also allows for urban farming at a greater scale with higher yields than other methods on the market.

 Attention: The Agria growing system returns to nature's way of farming to produce higher quality yields in a sustainable and accessible system of vertical farming.
