

Reform The Coinage – A Modern Enlightenment

The American monetary system is broken and in need of reform. The founders of our nation intended for the government to work for the people, and not the other way around. In this case, the government seemingly has colluded with the financial system to design a currency scheme that empowers the elite and drains the wealth of the average American. Or perhaps the money system has corrupted the government? This was a major concern of the Founders of this nation and echoed by honest politicians through the centuries. Now, however, daring to discuss the risks of money as a corruptive influence runs risk of being maligned.

Regardless, it is time to reform the coinage to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of our monetary system which was intended to provide equal opportunities for all Americans to build and maintain wealth. We must go “back to the future” to restore honest weights and measures in our money as an optional, state-based, Constitutional alternative.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » Transactional Gold & Silver
- » Parallel Economy? – The Gold Rule
- » The Pirate Money Movement

YOUR MISSION: Learn about the Pirate Money movement and the technology that could make it a reality.

⚠ ATTENTION: Whether we like it or not, we are at war. This economic war seeks to control you but with Pirate Money, there is a way to fight back.

Ep. 7-280 (OSINT) Open-Sourced Intelligence Report. This briefing includes a conversation between Kevin Freeman and Jason Cozens. Jason is a friend of the Economic War Room® and an American Patriot.

Jason is a qualified Architect with 20 years of experience within the eCommerce, technology, and digital marketing sectors. Founder of digital agencies Visuality and Bite, as well as online gold bullion dealer, GoldMadeSimple.com

Jason began development of Glint (glintpay.com), in 2014, launching the first iteration of the Glint app three years later. Jason's vision for a world where everyone has an equal opportunity to prosper has culminated in the creation of a global payments platform that enables its clients to buy, sell, save, send, and spend real, allocated gold, even at the checkout, using the Glint Mastercard and proprietary app.

1. Transactional Gold & Silver

One of the big projects we have been working on in the Economic War Room® is state-based transactional gold and silver, a solution to the impending threat of Central Bank Digital Currencies (CBDC), inflation, and monetary corruption.

What began as an idea has now spread into a movement as many states are getting on board to push this project across the finish line.

“Now we’re busy reaching out to states, with great success and talking them into implementing Article 1, Section 10 Money, which says a state can make gold and silver coin legal tender in the state, and it’s in the Constitution. Go look it up. The book Pirate Money makes the constitutional and practical case that states can have an optional gold and silver standard. But how do they implement it?” –Kevin Freeman

Many state legislatures and state treasurers have discussed the legality of transactional gold and silver, but the big question was how to implement it.

Jason Cozens, the CEO and founder of Glint, joined Kevin to answer all the important questions around the technological needs in implementing such a powerful idea.

“States have a lot of flexibility with Glint, and we’ve built a system that can be applied in lots of different configurations and scenarios.

I mean, even the underlying technology can make anything money if it needs to. It’s currency agnostic, it’s vault agnostic, and of course, it’s location agnostic. And we can configure it differently for different states’ needs... As a qualified architect, I’m trained to kind of delve into what the real requirements behind what a client is asking for and try and work out what really, they need. And my personal opinion is that actually, it’s best to have a solution that is as independent as possible.” –Jason Cozens

State leaders need to be able to ensure that the bill they work on passing is one that would benefit the people of their state. The good news is that the “how” is being discussed in great detail, and every question of the who, what, when, and where is being addressed!

The main points are simple:

Article 1, Section 10 of the Constitution allows states to declare gold and silver legal tender.

The electronic transfer, purchase, and sale of goods and services in gold is already possible through modern technology. Glint is already providing this service to their customers.

To challenge CBDC, the technology must be separate but integrated with the existing financial system. Glint has achieved this by functioning on a separate system, gold & silver, while being integrated through MasterCard.

This allows Glint customers to transact in gold without the merchant being aware, as they will receive the USD equivalent of the gold that was spent.

Glint is not fractional banking. It's not based on the US Dollar or any other national currency. Yet it is fully integrated into the modern economic system.

If a state declares gold and silver legal tender, Glint provides the necessary technology for a state to implement it in the modern world.

⚠ Attention: Transactional gold and silver is closer than ever as technology (like Glint) could easily be implemented by any state that declares gold and silver legal tender.

2. Parallel Economy? – The Gold Rule

Glint is not only a possible source of technology for transactional gold and silver, but their system also provides customers with new freedoms.

“The peer-to-peer system is really important...

I can transfer funds, gold, into your Glint account, or anyone else who has got a Glint account. Gold can transfer and it can move outside of the banking system using the Glint Gold peer-to-peer system... in any amount. So literally, a merchant who wants to receive gold as payment for their products or services can just have a little badge on their store saying Glint accepted. Here, a little QR code appears, and they flash the card and they would receive gold (instead of US dollars). So, with the Mastercard, the merchant has no idea that you're paying with gold because our system is in real-time-within 200 milliseconds. We have service-level agreements with Mastercard. It has to approve the transactions. We then sell just enough gold to cover the transaction in the currency of the merchant, but also with the peer-to-peer system. You can transfer funds now. That currently is not available with Glint in the US. It is everywhere else because of a lack of regulatory clarity that we have as a company.” –Jason Cozens

With peer-to-peer gold transactions, Glint users around the world can transfer gold to each other as gifts, payments, reimbursements, etc. without going through bank transfers or apps like Venmo.

The peer-to-peer technology is not yet available in the US because of the regulatory system here, however, if states were to declare it legal tender, peer-to-peer transactions of legal tender gold could happen every day.

“Glint has already proven that there is a need. There’s a thirst for this. People want it. And we show an ad on Google or Facebook, Instagram, social media network. People sign up. In fact, the conversion rate is so high, it only costs us $35 to acquire an active revenue-generating client, only about $7 just to get them to register. This pales in comparison to what AMEX would pay. They would pay $700 to acquire the same type of customer. So, in other words, when people see it and they know it exists, they want it. Right now, we’ve got a huge amount of problems in the world. People have recently been reminded about the specter of inflation, which is inherently built into our monetary system. They’ve been worried about the inherent systemic risk that’s in the banking system. People want security. And I think the innovative states who are leading this have recognized that it’s a service they need to offer their people. We can help them do that.” –Jason Cozens

The demand for this technology is huge as Glint has seen great success around the world. States that implement transactional gold and silver as legal tender will find a flood of people wanting to participate in this monetary revolution.

“A capital gains tax is when you buy an asset and the asset appreciates in value, and then you sell the asset, you owe a portion of that gain to the federal government... The problem is, Utah has produced these one-ounce silver coins, and they’ve been deemed collectibles by the IRS because you can’t really spend them. You can’t pay your employees with them. You can’t pay your mortgage with them. You can’t buy a stick of gum. It is not functional currency. I can’t walk in, buy my coffee, and get returned change in like currency. But with Glint I can. I can do all of that. That makes it functional currency. When you have legal tender, which only a state can do, and a state can only make gold and silver legal tender according to the Constitution. And then you have the functionality of Glint, which makes it functional currency. You put those two together and you might be able to own gold and silver without fear of capital gains taxation. I think that's going to make customer acquisition even easier, make this much more attractive for a state than anything ever offered anywhere.” –Kevin Freeman

With gold and silver declared as legal tender and, through technology like Glint, becoming functional, it would fall under the category of functional money for the IRS which would potentially remove capital gains tax from gold and silver.

This being the case, people from around the world would take part in the next gold rush, as they sought transactional, functional, gold and silver without capital gains tax.

Attention: If a state declares gold and silver legal tender, Glint would be able to provide users with access to a personal parallel economy through peer-to-peer transactions, and gold and silver may even be free of capital gains taxes.

3. The Pirate Money Movement

Since Kevin first came up with the idea for transactional gold and silver, many people have joined the movement to see this big idea become a reality.

Kevin's book Pirate Money has inspired many people and many state leaders to work together to reform the coinage and develop a new and better system for all Americans.

As CBDC looms and big corporations and big government seem to work together against the best interests of the American people, there will be a need for patriots willing to brave the seas of economic warfare in search of economic liberty.

“I wish I didn’t have to build Glint... But there’s a huge problem, and it’s a problem for us, and it’s a problem for our children and our grandchildren. And I felt like I had to develop this solution in 2008. It came to me like a blinding flash. And it’s powered me through and it will continue to power me through. I don’t care how we get there, but we want everybody to have their own personal gold standard. I want everybody to have their own equal opportunity to prosper, and it’s been my privilege to come here and find out about how much interest there is in making this happen. And I’d rather stand on the shoulders of giants and get this done quickly. Get this into the hands of the everyday people. That’s what’s going to happen as quickly as possible.” –Jason Cozens

In war, you fight for your country, your leader, and for the cause, but in battle, you fight for the soldier to your right and the soldier to your left.

In this economic war, we fight to serve God by protecting each other and fighting for liberty for all.

Connecting with Jason, and many others who are in the fight for economic liberty is a reminder of why we fight, but also an encouragement that many others are fighting for the same cause, protecting our liberty.

As we move forward, shoulder to shoulder, victory seems more attainable with each step, and the future we can build for our children and grandchildren looks brighter once more.

“We could go and hire one of the big firms and it’s a technology problem. It can be solved. It takes some money, it takes some time, it takes some investment and so forth. It’s technology. But what I want is a true believer. I want to work with a true believer, and we do that in the States. I talked to the state senators or the state representatives. We have identified true believers that they may be Democrat, they may be Republican, but they believe in economic justice. They believe that every individual ought to have the opportunity to have their own personal gold or silver standard, to be protected from inflation, to be protected from bank runs, and all that.” –Kevin Freeman

It is essential in this economic war that we surround ourselves with like-minded people we can confidently stand beside in the heat of battle.

There are many problems in the world that have driven us to fight for liberty, and as Jason explains, the Cantillon effect perfectly describes what has been happening in the world around us, and why we must resist it.

“As we came off the gold standard, it allowed central banks to be able to produce as much money as they wanted at the press of a button...

When money is created, those closest to the money supply benefit disproportionately from everybody else... they make money out of a product that costs them nothing to make. That’s a nice business. And then who benefits from it? Those closest to that financial system. The wealthier you are, the more money you can borrow. And you’ve recently been able to borrow this money for free. Now, the further you are away from that, you can’t borrow money for free. And some people are in a position where they can’t borrow any money at all, and the people who can borrow the money for free go out and buy real assets. They buy houses, stocks, and businesses. Those things then go up in price. And by the time that everybody else can get access to this money, those things have become out of reach for them. And you’ve got a sad, sad situation now where young people have given up on the idea, for instance, of buying property. And for me, that’s a scandal.” –Jason Cozens

The liberty and prosperity that were made equally available to all Americans by capitalism have slowly been whittled down as our society has been financialized so that the globalist elites can become wealthy and powerful at our expense.

The mission of Glint, and the vision for Pirate Money are to provide people with the economic justice and liberty to level the playing field and make money give everyone equal opportunity for prosperity.

⚠ Attention: The Pirate Money movement is growing as like-minded individuals come together to fight for economic liberty.
