

A Personal Golden Age

At the onset of human civilization, people recognized the value in material possessions. Life was exceptionally difficult, and danger was around every corner. However, villages, towns, and cities provided people with new measures of security. With their basic needs for survival met, people began to seek the satisfaction of other needs.

Around the world, many different commodities carried great value for different peoples. There was, however, one that was equally beloved by the people of every great civilization, gold. Gold has always been considered a prized possession, even in lands where it was exceptionally plentiful, gold adorned the temples, the palaces, and the homes of the wealthy. While most commodities gained and lost value by great margins through the ages, gold has maintained its value. Gold is more than a commodity. As for most of human history, gold is money.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » Why Gold?
- » Glint – Golden Transactions

⚠️ YOUR MISSION: Learn about the importance of a gold currency and how it can be implemented as currency today.

ATTENTION: Gold has been the primary measure of value throughout history as it provides stability and levels the economic playing field.

Ep. 7-277 (OSINT) Open-Sourced Intelligence Report. This briefing includes a conversation between Kevin Freeman and Jason Cozens. Jason is a friend of the Economic War Room® and an American Patriot.

Jason is a qualified Architect with 20 years of experience within the eCommerce, technology, and digital marketing sectors. Founder of digital agencies Visuality and Bite, as well as online gold bullion dealer, GoldMadeSimple.com

Jason began development of Glint (glintpay.com), in 2014, launching the first iteration of the Glint app three years later. Jason's vision for a world where everyone has an equal opportunity to prosper has culminated in the creation of a global payments platform that enables its clients to buy, sell, save, send, and spend real, allocated gold, even at the checkout, using the Glint MasterCard and proprietary app.

1. Why Gold?

As civilization developed, bartering proved inefficient, and merchants sought to develop standards of trade. The solution was to develop currency. Most currencies throughout history were metal stamped into coins.

Generally, the more valuable metals were used for higher denomination coins. Gold coins were worth more than silver, which was worth more than copper, iron, etc.

“Money is a unit of account, a store of value, and a means of exchange. That’s how the Federal Reserve defines money... historically, biblically, constitutionally, money has always been gold or gold and silver. Sometimes copper. But it’s always gold and silver.” –Kevin Freeman

At the time of Christ, the Roman Empire minted coins in a variety of metals, gold being the most valuable. The denarius, often used in scripture was a silver coin weighing around three grams. A gold coin of similar weight, the Quinarius, was worth 12.5 Denarii.

These denominations of currency changed name, but the size and weight of the coins were still a common standard over a thousand years later.

Around the time of the Crusades, wealthy Europeans who wanted to travel to the holy land feared bandits may attack their caravans in search for gold. Such long travels were expensive, and gold was heavy.

The Knights Templar had a network of castles and a unique idea. They would take gold on deposit and store it in a castle, and the depositor would receive a note that could be used to withdraw from their account at any Templar stronghold.

This system of Templar banks evolved into the banking system we know today in the Western world. While banking provided security and made life easier for travelers, it presented a whole new host of issues.

“I’m sat in front of the news watching the whole banking system starting to collapse. And we were hours away from the whole system ending. And for me, that was the first time that I realized that a bank is not a risk-free deposit of funds. That was the first time that I realized that your money depreciates in ways that are outside of your control. And I started thinking about, there must be a way I can save my hard-earned money somewhere where it’s not put at risk. And there must be a way, surely, in which I can have a form of money which does not depreciate over time. And I learned, of course, that gold had backed the US dollar until relatively recently 1971, the year after my birth. And I thought, well, why can’t we just enable gold and electronic payments again?” –Jason Cozens

These issues became a harsh reality for many Americans, and people around the world, when the banking system started to collapse in 2007-2009. Fortunately, the panic passed and order was restored.

Bidenomics has resurrected inflation. As food, gas, shelter, etc. prices soar, the buying power of the average American family declines. At the same time, Silicon Valley Bank reminded the world that banking is not a 100% guarantee.

In 2023 gold prices rose from about $1,850 to over $2,050 per ounce. Well, this is a misnomer, the value of gold hardly changed at all, the value of the US Dollar, and many world currencies declined as people flocked to gold.

“What I love about gold is that it’s immutable. It can’t change. And with all the best intentions in the world, cryptocurrencies can be edited, altered... if enough people involved in that community decide to change it. We’ve already seen that within the fiat currency world, the development of, central banking digital currencies... But all of these things, if they can be changed, another word for that is corruption. They can be corrupted. Gold is created when two neutron stars collide. It cannot be changed. It’s God’s money, so to speak. And so that’s why I think it’s become trusted around the planet. That’s why I think, throughout time and geographically, it is the most trusted form of money, we’ve ever had.” –Jason Cozens

Gold carries with it the evidence of stability, pricedingold.com provides examples of this when comparing the typical price of housing in the US in USD and gold ounces. The data is clear, over the last 60 years the price of housing has increased rapidly in USD, however, it has remained steady and even declined in ounces of gold.

This means getting paid and transacting in gold would have made life more affordable for the American people and would have functioned as an excellent hedge for inflation.

Attention: Gold is “God’s money” and it should be our money too.

2. Glint – Golden Transactions

One reason we do not have a gold currency is because gold coins are heavy. Carrying a coin purse full of gold is a hassle. To resolve this issue, The US government printed paper money that was backed by gold.

In that system, gold was fixed at a value of $20.67 per ounce until 1933 and was later changed to $35 an ounce before Nixon ended the convertibility of USD to gold in 1971.

Why go off the gold standard? Wikipedia admits the truth that “by retaining a fixed exchange rate, governments were hamstrung in engaging in expansionary policies.”

Federal governments were limited in their ability to grow because of the gold standard. In other words, the government ended the gold standard so that it could expand and increase its power over the people.

Even though this was supposedly done with good intentions, the founders of our nation would have opposed it.

“The current monetary system is one of the biggest contributors, I think, to the growing wealth gap. And as we’ve seen, those people closest to the creation of money benefit disproportionately from everybody else. And that’s because, of course, those people who get the money first are able to buy assets. Those assets start to appreciate in value.

And by the time that money gets to people who have less, then those assets become too expensive for them to buy. So, the idea of housing goes out of control. They can’t reach those types of things. And yet, Glint’s vision is a world where everyone has an equal opportunity to prosper. It doesn’t mean you necessarily will, but there should be a level playing field. Money should be a level playing field.” –Jason Cozens

Since the US left the gold standard in 1971, the buying power of the US Dollar has declined by 88%. This means those who used their money to buy assets in the early 1970s were able to maintain their wealth, while those who did not buy assets have lost 88% of their wealth.

The gold standard provided people with a level playing field. If you worked hard and succeeded in business, you could build wealth and build a life for your family. The middle class was booming.

With the removal of the gold standard, the percent of Americans living in middle-class housing declined from 62% of the US population in 1970 to 50% in 2020.

! Gold provided the level playing field that made middle-class America a possibility. Without it, the American way of life is under threat. However, all hope is not lost. The gold standard is making its comeback, but perhaps in an even better way than before.

"The very first customer of Glint . . . used his gold to buy something on a motorway service station. You know, if . . . we didn't have the integration with Mastercard, he would have walked in and said, do you take gold? And of course, they would have said no, because he was the very first customer and there were no merchants in the world accepting peer-to-peer transfers. Right. But because of the integration and partnership with Mastercard, he was able to use gold anywhere in the world. And so can any of our clients, wherever they are. Anyone in the United States, you can buy gold, you can save it. You can send it, [or] you can spend it. We've essentially enabled people to have their own personal gold standard." –Jason Cozens

The founders of our great nation loved gold as currency, and they loved personal property. They loathed centralized government, hated paper money, and wanted the systems that impacted the people to be formed as close to the people as possible. The more power the individual had over the system in which they lived the better.

How the founders would have loved at the idea of a personal gold standard.

The ability to buy, sell, and receive payment in gold was essential to the founders, and now that same option is available to us.

The brilliance of Glint is that the system is not just an app for sending gold to your friends, like some trading card games for grown-ups, it is integrated into the financial system.

This allows you to transact in gold with other people who are transacting in USD.

“This is gold right here. Yeah, it’s a half escudo. I tried to buy a cup of coffee with this. And the young man behind the counter said, ‘I don’t know what to do with that.’ But I took my Glint card in and I handed it to him and I asked, ‘Will you take this?’ And he said, ‘Oh, it’s a Mastercard. Of course.’ And I bought my coffee with gold.” –Kevin Freeman

The system is simple, your Glint card functions like a debit card but instead of taking money out of your bank account, the Glint card uses gold in your Glint account.

Jason explains “There’s no credit involved in the entire system. So, if you don’t have any dollars in there or you don’t have any gold, you just get declined.”

With this debit system, you are able to keep track of how much gold is in your account and see its current value in USD based on the live conversion rate.

Like any other MasterCard, you can use the card for in-person and online shopping. Nobody will even know that you transacted in gold unless you tell them with a grin!

To see how this works, watch this week’s episode where Jason Cozens demonstrates the Glint app and purchases a copy of Kevin Freeman’s new book Pirate Money with gold.

Attention: Gold is the best currency, and now with Glint that currency can be back in your hands. Glint has granted you access to your own personal gold standard.
