

Is DEI Killing the American Dream for Minorities?

When policy decisions, racial identity politics, and economic mobility intersect, understanding their implications is crucial. These elements shape the lives of minorities in America. Government regulations disproportionately affect minority communities, especially those designed to ‘help’ which have only caused harm.

Donna Jackson, a prominent advocate for minority empowerment and Director of Membership Development for Project 21 Black Leadership Network, shares about promoting self-reliance within minority communities, analyzing the impact of government policies such as the Green New Deal and regulations, and exploring ways to close the wealth gap. Through these discussions, Jackson highlights the importance of individual agency, the unintended consequences of government intervention, and practical solutions for economic mobility.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » Impact of Government Regulations on Minority Communities
- » Project 21 and Individual Empowerment
- » Solutions for Reducing the Wealth Gap – Economic Mobility

YOUR MISSION: Understand how policy impacts personal freedom and economic opportunities, particularly for minority communities, and consider how individual empowerment and targeted solutions can foster economic growth and self-sufficiency.

WHY YOU SHOULD CARE

- » Understanding the effects of government regulations and policies like CRT and DEI initiatives helps you recognize how these policies might influence your economic opportunities, social mobility, and personal freedoms.
- » Government regulations often exacerbate economic disparities.

- » Empowering individuals within minority communities can foster resilience, reduce dependency on government, and strengthen the fabric of society.
- » Recognizing the importance of individual empowerment over collective identity can lead to more nuanced policy-making and societal interactions, promoting true equality.
- » Affordable housing and accessible job markets offer practical solutions individuals can advocate for to enhance economic opportunities and close the wealth gap.

Ep. 8-320 (OSINT) Open-Sourced Intelligence Report. This briefing includes a conversation between Kevin Freeman and Donna Jackson. Donna is a friend of the Economic War Room® and a patriot.

Donna Jackson, the director of membership development for the Project 21 black leadership network, is a seasoned accountant with experience in the public and private sectors and previous forays into politics and ministry. She currently serves as an advisory board member for the Independent Women's Forum (IWF) Center for Energy and Conservation, an advisory board member of the 2025 Project, a member of the Board of Directors of The Conservative Caucus, a member of the Heritage Foundation African American Advisory Council, and a member of the Board of Advisors of Our America. She is a former board member of the Little Rock Minority Disability Advisory Network and a former member of the Crittenden County (Arkansas) Workforce Development Planning Committee. She was also a contributor to the Ernst & Young Diversity Think Tank.

1. Impact of Government Regulations on Minority Communities

Government regulations have significant repercussions on minority communities. These policies increase living costs, limit job opportunities, and restrict access to essential resources.

The Green New Deal limits economic opportunities by driving industrial jobs overseas and increasing the cost of essential goods and services.

“The Green New Deal is the worst for black Americans... (industrial jobs) represent the highest paying jobs and usually pay double, double what you can have in non-industrial jobs.” –Donna Jackson

CRT and DEI initiatives also damage the economic mobility of many Americans as these frameworks reduce individuals to categories rather than recognizing them for their talents and accomplishments.

“If I tell someone, you know what, I was recruited by all of the big four accounting firms... people will think, oh, well, that was because you were black, and you were a female—not because I took 24 units in a semester each time and got straight A’s.” –Donna Jackson

CRT and DEI initiatives do not promote equality as intended but instead undermine individual achievements. By classifying individuals solely by race or gender, these programs can diminish hard-earned accomplishments and fuel resentment.

“A lot of regulation happened after the Civil War with the attempt to control populations... to price people out of neighborhoods... to price people out of automobiles... to keep people from having guns. A lot of the gun regulations were in order to keep minorities from owning guns. Regulations can be extraordinarily racist. Wealthy people can get around them. But the average middle class and below, they struggle with these regulations.”

–Kevin Freeman, CFA

Attention: Regulations, even those intended for societal good, must be scrutinized for their impact on economic equality, particularly regarding access to jobs and housing.

2. Project 21 and Individual Empowerment

Challenging the negative effects of these regulations, Project 21 is a national network within the African American community focused on fostering independence and promoting individual agency over government dependency.

Through Project 21, Jackson and her peers advocate for policies that encourage self-reliance and economic freedom, distancing themselves from narratives that assume minority communities are monolithic or dependent.

“We want to build strong families and strong communities. We want to be economically and financially secure. We want the same dream that every other American wants.”
—Donna Jackson

Project 21 emphasizes the American Dream, advocating for policies that minimize government control and enhance economic opportunities for minorities.

By highlighting success stories and rejecting stereotypes, Project 21 offers a model of empowerment that encourages individuals to pursue economic mobility and personal growth.

“There are actually level-headed African Americans that take pride in the fact that we are a part of this American dream. We want to build strong families and strong communities.” —Donna Jackson

Project 21 represents a proactive approach within African American communities, emphasizing individual empowerment and self-sufficiency over dependency on government programs. It presents a vision of minority empowerment rooted in the American Dream, advocating for less government involvement and more personal agency.

⚠ Attention: Individual empowerment is a critical path to achieving long-term community resilience and self-sufficiency.

3. Solutions for Reducing the Wealth Gap – Economic Mobility

Jackson suggests reducing regulations and promoting policies that expand housing affordability and transportation access to enhance economic mobility. She highlights the importance of reliable transportation, such as affordable cars, to provide access to job opportunities, especially as many companies relocate from urban centers.

“If you give a minority a car...it actually depletes the wage gap between black and white because you have more opportunities outside of your community... With the vehicle, you get to participate in the gig economy, you get to have a regular job, and you actually get to be able to have more sources and better-paying jobs that may not exist in your community.” –Donna Jackson

By advocating for fewer regulations that increase housing and transportation costs, Jackson proposes practical steps to make economic opportunities more accessible to minority communities.

This approach seeks to remove barriers that inhibit financial independence, allowing individuals to pursue stable employment and affordable homeownership.

Attention: Promoting affordable housing and accessible transportation can be transformative in bridging the wealth gap and promoting financial independence.
