

Applying the Trump Doctrine

The United States is facing a multidimensional threat environment defined by rising foreign aggression, widespread internal subversion, and eroding confidence in democratic systems. China is executing a coordinated campaign of cyber and geopolitical warfare aimed at weakening American sovereignty and dismantling global alliances. At the same time, internal actors within the U.S. government are actively working against elected leadership and constitutional mandates. Meanwhile, election systems—both domestically and abroad—are vulnerable to fraud and foreign interference, undermining the foundation of representative government. Addressing these threats requires vigilance, reform, and a bold doctrine of economic and strategic deterrence.

In this briefing with Colonel John Mills (ret), we will discuss the following:

- » National Sovereignty Under Siege: Foreign Influence and Internal Subversion
- » Electoral Integrity and the Fight for Transparent Governance
- » Confronting China with a Doctrine of Economic and Strategic Rollback

YOUR MISSION: Understand the nature of today's threats to American sovereignty and take actionable steps that safeguard our national interests at the local, national, and international levels.

WHY YOU SHOULD CARE

- » Foreign adversaries like China, combined with internal saboteurs in government, threaten your freedoms and national stability by eroding the institutions meant to protect them.
- » Your voice and vote only matter if the system behind them is honest and secure. Election integrity determines the legitimacy of every law and policy that governs your life.
- » China's global power grab affects everything from trade to military readiness understanding how to counter it ensures a safer and more prosperous future for Americans.

Ep. 9-346 (OSINT) Open-Sourced Intelligence Report. This briefing includes a conversation between Kevin Freeman and Colonel (Ret.) John R. Mills. Colonel Mills is a friend of the Economic War Room® and an American Patriot.

Colonel (Ret.) John R. Mills is a national security professional with over 30 years of service in the U.S. Army and Army Reserves. He has held significant positions, including Director of Cybersecurity Policy, Strategy, and International Affairs in the Office of the Secretary of Defense. Colonel Mills has served in various capacities across five distinct eras: the Cold War, Peace Dividend, War on Terror, World in Chaos, and the current era of Great Power Competition. His expertise encompasses cybersecurity policy, national security strategy, and inter-agency coordination. He is also an author, with works focusing on national security and governmental integrity.

1. National Sovereignty Under Siege: Foreign Influence and Internal Subversion

The United States is under assault from both foreign adversaries and domestic actors working against the national interest.

China has aggressively expanded its influence through cyber operations, espionage, and infrastructure penetration, including via solar panel technology, telecommunications, and retail systems.

Chinese cyber campaigns such as “Salt Typhoon” are believed to be responsible for widespread network disruptions, including military and retail systems.

Simultaneously, internal bureaucrats, often unelected and ideologically entrenched, have engaged in sabotage from within the federal government.

Some have openly admitted to obstructing presidential policies, violating the very oaths of office they swore to uphold.

“We have willing enablers. James O’Keefe just outed somebody that I believe I used to work with... the name’s escaping me right now, but it’s a GS-15 that was inside, I believe, under Secretary of Defense for Research and Development at the Pentagon—part of the Office of the Secretary of Defense staff—caught him on tape, this clown, just saying he was doing everything possible to undermine the President. It was shameful.”

—Colonel John Mills (ret)

In some cases, money and influence have been laundered through nonprofits and federal grant programs, creating vast, unaccountable networks that operate outside of democratic oversight.

When foreign infiltration and domestic betrayal intersect, the result is a hollowing out of national authority and a collapse of public confidence in governance.

If left unchecked, these forces will continue to erode America's ability to defend its interests and uphold its Constitution.

Attention: Foreign and domestic actors are actively undermining U.S. sovereignty, requiring vigilant oversight and decisive action to protect national interests.

2. Electoral Integrity and the Fight for Transparent Governance

Election integrity is the cornerstone of a functioning republic. Without it, every policy, leader, and law lacks legitimacy.

A recent Supreme Court ruling clarified that states could remove illegal voters from registration rolls at any time, overruling past interpretations of the 1993 Motor Voter Act.

This empowers local jurisdictions to secure their election systems, but success hinges on follow-through and public pressure.

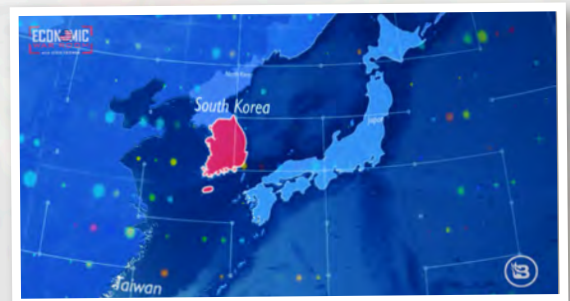

“SCOTUS says 18 U.S. Code 611 trumps Motor Voter. Yes, you can remove a voter at any time that is illegal at any time off the rolls. And that’s the foundational causal factor of a fraudulent election—as most states have very dirty election rolls, including Virginia.”

—Colonel John Mills (ret)

Globally, the threat of election interference is escalating. In South Korea—one of America’s most critical allies—there is credible concern over a “coup in plain sight.”

Inflated early and overseas voting, Chinese involvement in vote counting, and media suppression have raised alarms about a rigged election that could hand power to a China-aligned regime.

If this is true, South Korea’s strategic alliance with the U.S. would be severely weakened, affecting everything from military cooperation to economic stability in the Indo-Pacific.

Fraudulent elections erode democracy from within.

The Virginia example proves that individuals can demand accountability and reform.

The situation in South Korea illustrates how quickly a sovereign nation and stable ally can fall under hostile influence, with global ramifications.

 Attention: Protecting electoral integrity is critical to ensuring that democratic governance reflects the true will of the people, free from manipulation.

3. Confronting China with a Doctrine of Economic and Strategic Rollback

China is not merely a competitor—it is leading a global alliance against American interests.

Through its “no limits” partnerships with countries like Russia, Iran, North Korea, and Venezuela, China has built a web of economic and military proxies to challenge U.S. dominance.

This alliance is not limited to diplomatic maneuvering; Chinese personnel are active on the ground in conflicts such as Ukraine, Chinese cyber forces are probing American infrastructure, and Chinese influence operations are destabilizing key allies like South Korea.

“Trump is the first president in my lifetime that’s actually addressed China as a threat and not an opportunity.” —Kevin Freeman

The appropriate response is not accommodation but confrontation. The U.S. must adopt a new doctrine—one of deterrence and rollback—similar to the strategy that brought down the Soviet Union.

This includes rebuilding the U.S. military to counter emerging threats, severing strategic economic dependencies, and using America’s economic strength to isolate China on the global stage.

Trade, tariffs, technological independence, and global diplomacy must all align under a singular purpose: halting China’s advance and reasserting American leadership.

 Attention: A strategic doctrine of deterrence and rollback is essential to counter China’s global campaign and safeguard U.S. economic and security interests.
