

Feeling American Energy from Globalist Control

The global climate policy movement, spearheaded by international accords and enforced through financial institutions and legal mechanisms, poses a direct threat to American energy independence, economic strength, and consumer affordability. Although the United States withdrew from the Paris Climate Accords under President Trump, globalist forces continue to exert influence through Environmental, Social, and Governance (ESG) mandates and net-zero commitments adopted by multinational corporations. These actions are further reinforced through “climate lawfare”—a wave of lawsuits designed to impose radical environmental agendas via the courts rather than legislation. This Economic Battle Plan™ outlines how these converging threats are weakening the U.S. grid, empowering foreign adversaries, and raising costs for ordinary Americans.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » Globalist Climate Agendas Undermine U.S. Energy
- » Net-Zero and ESG Policies Hurt Consumers
- » Climate Lawfare Bypasses Legislation

YOUR MISSION: Understand how globalist climate policies, net-zero mandates, and coordinated legal warfare are undermining America’s energy resilience—and take strategic action to defend affordable, reliable energy.

WHY YOU SHOULD CARE

- » Global climate accords like the Paris Agreement continue to pressure U.S. companies into adopting costly energy reductions, increasing your household utility bills, and shifting power to nations like China.

- » Net-zero and ESG policies have already driven up U.S. electricity costs (28% in Texas) and eroded grid reliability, exposing your family to blackouts and future energy insecurity.
- » Activist lawsuits—based on politicized climate claims—threaten to drive energy companies out of business or force higher prices on consumers, while bypassing fair legislative debate.

Ep. 9-353 (OSINT) Open-Sourced Intelligence Report. This briefing includes a conversation between Kevin Freeman and Jason Isaac. Jason is a friend of the Economic War Room® and an American Patriot.

Jason Isaac is Director of Life:Powered, a national initiative of the Texas Public Policy Foundation to raise America's energy IQ. Jason has appeared live on Fox Business Network and other national news shows, and his commentaries have been published in Fox Business, The Hill, The Washington Examiner, The Daily Caller, and other publications. He is a regular contributor to The Epoch Times.

Prior to joining Life:Powered, Jason, a fourth-generation native Texan, was elected four times as the State Representative for Hays and Blanco counties in the Texas Hill Country. During his tenure, he served on the Energy Resources and Environmental Regulation committees.

1. Globalist Climate Agendas Undermine U.S. Energy

The Paris Climate Accords, while not ratified by Congress, continue to shape corporate behavior in the United States through financial coercion and reputational pressure.

Multinational firms, under the influence of global asset managers like BlackRock and Vanguard, have committed to net-zero carbon targets that weaken American energy production and enrich adversarial regimes abroad.

These accords shift energy production away from the U.S.—where it is produced more cleanly and responsibly—and toward authoritarian nations like China, which aggressively expand their fossil fuel infrastructure.

“They’ve got us subsidizing their economy through these accords... literally taking us offline from an electricity standpoint, which means that we’re going to be behind in the AI race because AI is going to require enormous amounts of electricity. They have us literally putting ourselves in a subjected position.” —Kevin Freeman

Rather than protect the planet, these measures centralize authority within unaccountable international institutions such as the UN and the World Economic Forum.

The result? A rise in energy costs for Americans, with electricity prices up 28% in Texas alone, and a diminished ability to compete in global technology races, including artificial intelligence, an industry reliant on massive amounts of uninterrupted power. And the climate is worse by result.

⚠ Attention: Globalist climate agendas like the Paris Accords are shifting energy dominance to America's adversaries while burdening U.S. consumers with higher costs and less reliable power.

2. Net-Zero and ESG Policies Hurt Consumers

Net-zero and ESG frameworks force companies to abandon coal, natural gas, and nuclear power, and reliable energy sources, in favor of intermittent renewables like wind and solar.

While promoted as “clean,” these sources lack consistency, especially during extreme weather conditions.

In Texas, the energy grid has become 47% reliant on renewables, contributing to sharp price increases and widespread outages, including those during the deadly Winter Storm Uri.

“There are no low-energy, rich countries. They don't exist. But those that do have a high carbon per capita emissions, they're the wealthiest places on the planet.” —Jason Isaac

One of the most devastating examples of net-zero failure comes from Sri Lanka, where banning nitrogen-based fertilizers to comply with ESG goals led to a 40% drop in food production and an 80% spike in food prices.

This highlights a broader humanitarian cost: Over 3 billion people worldwide still lack access to reliable electricity, and U.S. fossil fuel production, done more cleanly and responsibly than anywhere else, could be the key to lifting them out of poverty.

Globally, these policies empower regimes like the Chinese Communist Party, which continues to build coal-fired plants and export energy, while America's manufacturing base weakens.

"Net-zero" is a politically defined goal of eliminating or offsetting all carbon dioxide emissions by a target date, often 2050.

The net-zero push is projected to cost the U.S. $50 trillion by 2050, yet, according to UN-aligned climate models, if the U.S. hits net zero, the effect on global temperatures would be less than 0.1°C by 2100—an astronomically expensive gesture with negligible impact.

Attention: Net-zero and ESG mandates are raising your energy bills, undermining grid stability, and empowering adversaries abroad while delivering minimal environmental benefit.

3. Climate Lawfare Bypasses Legislation

With growing resistance to extreme environmental policies, activists have turned to the courts, launching a wave of lawsuits designed to enforce climate goals without voter consent.

States like Hawaii, Vermont, and New York now allow lawsuits against energy companies based on broad and vague climate-related damages.

Many of these cases are orchestrated by firms like Sher Edling, which partner with local governments to sue companies, often with no direct operations in those states.

Behind this strategy is the Climate Judiciary Project, run by the Environmental Law Institute, which has trained over 2,000 judges to rule in favor of climate claims.

These sessions use debunked or highly disputed climate models to influence rulings and violate judicial impartiality.

Some judges involved have refused to recuse themselves from cases, even when their political bias is evident.

“The Climate Judiciary Project has been going around the U.S. since 2018. And I say tainting judges. To date, they’ve trained over 2,000 judges, the federal and the state level, on how to rule on these climate cases. It’s really what it is. They’re getting to the referees before the game has even started, and they’re telling the referees how the game is going to go.” –Jason Isaac

The result is an erosion of trust in the legal system and an open door to policymaking through judicial fiat.

Notably, some politically connected entities—such as Hawaii’s only oil refinery which donates to Democrats—are exempted from lawsuits, exposing the partisan nature of these attacks.

In response to these issues, Senator Ted Cruz has launched congressional hearings to investigate the rise of climate lawfare and expose how coordinated legal attacks are being used to impose radical environmental agendas through the courts.

His efforts aim to hold accountable the activist networks influencing judicial decisions and to safeguard the integrity of the legal system.

These hearings represent a critical step toward restoring fairness, transparency, and constitutional boundaries in energy policy.

⚠ Attention: Climate lawfare is a backdoor method to force radical environmental policy, bypassing democratic processes and increasing the cost of energy for all Americans.
