

IT IS TIME TO GET IN THE FIGHT

America is under full-scale economic assault. Foreign adversaries are weaponizing trade, energy, currency, technology, supply chains, cyber warfare, and intellectual property theft against us, while domestic policies are weakening the nation from within through debt, politicized investment mandates, anti-merit corporate policies, cancel culture, and the threat of programmable central bank digital currency. This is not theory. It is documented reality playing out in markets, boardrooms, government, and daily life.

Yet Americans are not helpless victims. Every family, investor, advisor, business owner, and citizen has a role to play. The answer is not fear, passivity, or waiting for someone else to solve the problem. The answer is awareness, action, faith, and strategic economic engagement. The mission is clear: protect what you have, reposition your capital, build resilience, and get in the fight.

In this briefing we will discuss the following:

- » The Battlefield: America's Economic War Is Already Underway
- » The Battle Plan: Protect, Reposition, and Weaponize Your Money
- » The Battle Cry: Be One of the Little Ships

YOUR MISSION: Recognize the economic war already underway, understand how it affects your family and finances, and take practical steps to protect your future, redirect capital toward American strength, and defend economic liberty for yourself and future generations.

WHY YOU SHOULD CARE

- » Economic warfare is not theoretical. It affects national security, supply chains, defense capabilities, the price and availability of everyday goods, and the stability of the economy your family depends on.
- » Foreign and domestic pressures directly strike at your retirement accounts, savings, paycheck, purchasing power, and ability to provide for your family.
- » Understanding unrestricted warfare — a doctrine that treats economics, trade, technology, finance, and information as battlefields — reveals why dependence on hostile nations creates strategic vulnerability.
- » Domestic policies such as ESG mandates, DEI initiatives, cancel culture, and the threat of programmable central bank digital currency can distort investment decisions, weaken merit, increase hidden portfolio risks, and threaten personal financial freedom.
- » Your money is not neutral. Where you save, invest, spend, and borrow can either strengthen American resilience or unknowingly support the very forces working against America's liberty, security, and values.
- » Ordinary Americans can still make a difference. Through sound money, strategic investing, reduced debt, civic engagement, prayer, and courageous action, citizens can move from passive exposure to active participation in national renewal.

1. The Battlefield: America's Economic War Is Already Underway

America's enemies do not view our economy the way most Americans do. We tend to see trade, markets, technology, investment, and supply chains as tools of prosperity. Our adversaries see them as instruments of power.

They understand that a nation can be weakened without firing a shot if its industries are hollowed out, its supply chains are captured, its currency is undermined, its innovation is stolen, and its people are made dependent.

China is the clearest example. Its military doctrine includes the concept of "unrestricted warfare," meaning conflict is not limited to traditional military action. Economics, finance, cyber operations, trade policy, resource control, and information warfare can all be used as weapons.

Rare earth minerals and critical materials are central to this strategy. These materials are not obscure technical inputs. They are used in smartphones, electric vehicle batteries, wind turbines, medical equipment, and advanced defense systems, including F-35 fighter jets and precision-guided missiles.

"America is under full-scale economic assault. Foreign adversaries are weaponizing trade, energy, currency and technology against us. Domestic policies are undermining our strength from within." –Kevin D. Freeman, CFA, D.Sc. (h.c.)

When China controls roughly 60 to 70 percent of global rare earth mining production and up to 90 percent or more of processing and refining capacity, it gains leverage over both the American economy and the American military. That leverage can be used to manipulate prices, restrict access, weaken domestic production, and pressure U.S. policymakers. This is not simply an economic issue. It is a national security vulnerability.

Currency manipulation is another weapon. By keeping exports artificially cheap, China can flood American markets with subsidized goods, undercut U.S. manufacturers, destroy jobs, and create dependence on foreign supply chains.

This is not true free-market competition. It is predatory trade strategy. Factories close, towns are hollowed out, families are pushed into lower-wage work, and America's industrial base becomes weaker.

Cyber warfare adds another layer. Attacks on companies, government agencies, power grids, water systems, financial networks, and critical infrastructure are not merely criminal activity. They are reconnaissance. They are preparation. They reveal vulnerabilities that can be exploited during a future crisis.

Intellectual property theft compounds the damage. When American innovation, research, designs, and technology are stolen, the loss is not just financial. It accelerates China's military modernization and economic rise while weakening America's competitive edge.

“Make no mistake, China and other adversaries view our free marketplace as their battle space. What we see as honest commerce, fair trade, and open markets, they see as an open domain to conquer, exploit, and ultimately weaken.” –Kevin D. Freeman, CFA, D.Sc. (h.c.)

The threat, however, is not only foreign. America is also weakening itself from within. National debt approaching $40 trillion is not just a political talking point. It threatens currency stability, increases future tax burdens, raises pressure on interest rates, and limits the country's ability to invest in defense, infrastructure, and productive growth. Interest payments alone now compete with, and in some years exceed, core national priorities that should be strengthening the country.

ESG investing mandates are another internal vulnerability. ESG stands for Environmental, Social, and Governance. In practice, ESG often pressures companies and investment managers to prioritize political and social scoring systems over profitability, resilience, safety, innovation, and shareholder value.

When capital is redirected according to ideological criteria rather than economic strength, the country becomes weaker.

DEI policies, or Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion programs, can also become a problem when they prioritize identity categories over merit, competence, and unity. In a dangerous global environment, America needs excellence, cohesion, and capability.

Anything that undermines those priorities weakens national competitiveness. Cancel culture adds further pressure by punishing businesses and individuals for challenging approved narratives. When people are afraid to speak economic truth, challenge flawed policy, or defend traditional values, the marketplace becomes less free.

A programmable central bank digital currency, or CBDC, could create unprecedented financial control if designed improperly. A CBDC is a digital form of central bank money. If programmable, it could theoretically allow authorities to monitor transactions, restrict spending, freeze accounts, or condition economic access on behavior or politics. That is not merely a financial issue. It is a liberty issue.

When foreign economic warfare is combined with domestic weakness, the result is a direct attack on retirement accounts, savings, paychecks, purchasing power, and the economic foundation of the republic. Anyone blindly relying on old assumptions, fragile global supply chains, captured institutions, or traditional paper assets alone may already be positioned as collateral damage in this unfolding economic war.

 Attention: The economic war is not coming — it is already here, and it directly targets America's independence, your financial security, and the future your children and grandchildren will inherit.

2. The Battle Plan: Protect, Reposition, and Weaponize Your Money

Awareness is only the first step. Seeing the battlefield matters, but awareness without action leads only to frustration, fear, and defeat. Action is why the Economic War Room exists. We are not here simply to diagnose the threats or ring alarm bells. We are here to equip Americans with practical, battle-tested strategies they can begin applying in their own financial lives.

The good news is this: Americans are not helpless victims in this economic war. Families, investors, advisors, business owners, and citizens can act. You can protect what you have. You can reduce your vulnerabilities. You can reposition your capital. And you can use your money in a way that strengthens liberty, security, and the values that made this nation great.

“We don’t just diagnose the threats and ring alarm bells, we build real, actionable, battle-tested solutions.” –Kevin D. Freeman, CFA, D.Sc. (h.c.)

YOUR BATTLE PLAN BEGINS WITH FIVE PRACTICAL STEPS:

1. Protect What You Have

The foundation of winning any war is a strong defense. In financial terms, that means reviewing whether your savings, retirement accounts, investment accounts, and broader financial strategy are prepared for inflation, currency weakness, market volatility, institutional instability, policy risk, and potential restrictions on financial access.

For previous generations, a traditional “buy, hold, and diversify” approach built mostly around stocks and bonds may have been enough. In today’s contested economic environment, that assumption deserves a serious second look. Stocks and bonds can still have a role, but a portfolio built entirely around paper assets may be vulnerable if governments inflate the currency, devalue purchasing power, or freeze financial accounts in a crisis.

Start by auditing your current financial position. Review where your money is held, what companies and funds you own, how much exposure you have to fragile global supply chains, how much debt you carry, and whether your current plan would hold up during inflation, market disruption, or financial-system stress. You may want professional help to do this. That’s why we are building the NSIC as we will explain later in this briefing.

2. Diversify Intelligently with Transactional Gold and Silver

One of the time-tested tools for financial defense is transactional gold and silver. Gold and silver have functioned as honest money and stores of value for thousands of years. Unlike paper assets, physical precious metals are not dependent on the promise of a government, central bank, corporation, or financial institution in the same way.

Transactional gold and silver mean more than owning metals as a passive hedge. It points toward the practical use of gold and silver as sound money: a way to hold purchasing power outside a weakening dollar system and, where available, use precious metals in daily financial life.

“The foundation of winning any war is a strong defense.” –Kevin D. Freeman, CFA, D.Sc. (h.c.)

This is not fear-driven hoarding. In fact, it’s the opposite because this gold and silver can be spent! This is strategic preparation. Learn how physical gold and silver work. Understand the difference between paper claims and actual metal. Review whether precious metals have a role in your broader financial plan. Explore tools such as transactionalgold.com and Glint. The goal is strategic reserves, purchasing-power protection, practical usability, and greater independence from unpredictable monetary policy.

3. Go on Offense by Redirecting Capital Toward American Strength

Defense is essential, but defense alone is not enough. In an economic war, you also have to take ground. This also means refusing to unintentionally feed your economic adversaries with your hard-earned investment capital and deliberately redirecting dollars toward the companies and sectors rebuilding American strength.

This includes domestic energy producers, critical minerals companies, reshoring manufacturers, defense technology firms, and advanced manufacturing. Domestic energy strengthens independence. Critical minerals reduce dependence on China-controlled supply chains. Reshoring brings factories, jobs, and production back to American soil. Defense technology and advanced manufacturing help preserve America's military and industrial edge.

Every dollar you invest has consequences. It can strengthen companies that make America more dependent, more vulnerable, or more aligned with hostile interests. Or it can help nourish the builders of American security and prosperity.

Again, this is why we are building the NSIC Institute. More to come.

4. Build Real Resilience and Reduce Vulnerabilities

A family carrying too much high-interest debt, holding too little emergency reserve, and depending too heavily on fragile systems is easier to pressure during a crisis. Real resilience begins at the household level.

That means having resources you can access, assets you control, and fewer financial obligations that can crush you if interest rates rise or income is disrupted. It may include emergency reserves, reduced consumer debt, tangible assets, income-producing hard assets, and lower counterparty risk.

Counterparty risk is the danger that another person, company, bank, broker, government, or institution fails to honor its obligation to you. Reducing counterparty risk means becoming less dependent on promises from fragile or politicized institutions and more anchored in assets and decisions you can control.

Start by aggressively paying down high-interest credit card or consumer debt. Build emergency savings. Consider hard assets. Review where your accounts are held. Reduce unnecessary dependence on systems you do not control.

5. Democratize Investing, Think Generationally, and Engage Civically

This battle plan does not stop with personal finance. It moves into generational and civic responsibility. Americans cannot leave investing, policy, money, and national security only to Wall Street insiders or political elites. Ordinary citizens must become informed, active, and engaged.

Democratizing investing means helping everyday Americans understand how markets, money, policy, and national security intersect. Thinking generationally means building wealth not only for yourself, but for your children and grandchildren. Civic engagement means voting, speaking truth, contacting representatives, and supporting policies that promote free markets, sound money, fiscal responsibility, reduced regulation, American energy dominance, and lower taxes.

“We’re also teaching ordinary investors, just like you, how to weaponize your money, not for selfish greed or speculation, but for three unbreakable pillars liberty, security, and your personal values.” —Kevin D. Freeman, CFA, D.Sc. (h.c.)

This is what it means to stop being a passive consumer and become an active economic warrior. Educate yourself. Work with an NSIC-trained advisor or another informed professional. Teach your family about sound money and economic freedom. Vote consistently. Contact your elected officials. Support policies that put prosperity back in the hands of We the People.

THE PRACTICAL RESPONSE CAN BE SUMMARIZED IN AN EIGHT-STEP CHECKLIST:

1. Audit your current portfolio this week for hidden risks.

Review your holdings for exposure to fragile supply chains, adversarial economies, politically distorted capital allocation, excessive paper assets, or companies that conflict with your values.

2. Begin or increase your allocations to transactional gold and silver.

Consider whether sound money and physical precious metals have a role in protecting purchasing power and reducing dependence on a weakening dollar. Gold is not an investment in this regard. It is another form of Constitutional money.

3. Shift meaningful capital to companies strengthening American security.
Look for ways to support domestic energy, critical minerals, reshoring, defense technology, advanced manufacturing, and other sectors that rebuild national resilience.
4. Aggressively reduce high-interest personal debt.
Prioritize credit cards and other costly consumer debt that can become a crushing burden when rates rise or economic shocks hit.
5. Connect with an NSIC-trained advisor who understands economic warfare.
Work with professionals who recognize the intersection of national security, capital markets, supply chains, sound money, and values-aligned investing.
6. Visit EconomicWarRoom.com for full battle plans and ongoing resources.
Continue learning, stay informed, and use available tools to build a stronger personal financial strategy.
7. Vote in every election for free-market, freedom-loving candidates.
Support leaders who champion sound money, fiscal responsibility, American energy dominance, reduced regulation, lower taxes, and policies that put prosperity back in the hands of the people.
8. Build generational wealth today for your children and grandchildren.
Move beyond short-term survival and begin making financial, civic, and educational decisions that preserve liberty and opportunity for future generations.

These are not fear-driven reactions. These are strategic moves for Americans who understand the moment. Every dollar you control can either strengthen the country or reinforce the systems being used against it.

The battle plan is personal, practical, and national at the same time: protect what you have, reposition what you control, and use your money in alignment with liberty, security, and values.

Attention: Protecting your family in an economic war requires more than passive investing; it requires defensive reserves, offensive capital allocation, reduced debt, informed advice, civic engagement, and values-aligned action.

3. The Battle Cry: Be One of the Little Ships

There are moments in history when ordinary people become strategically necessary. Dunkirk was one of those moments. In May 1940, nearly 400,000 British and Allied troops were trapped on the beaches of Dunkirk as Hitler's forces swept through France. The situation appeared hopeless. The British Navy's larger vessels could not easily reach the shallow beaches, and total annihilation or capture seemed possible.

Then came the call for the "little ships." Fishing boats, pleasure yachts, river ferries, tugboats, and small civilian vessels crossed the English Channel to help rescue the stranded troops. Ordinary citizens became part of a miracle of deliverance.

Dunkirk was not merely a military story. It was a spiritual and civic lesson. King George VI called for a National Day of Prayer. Churches were packed. The nation humbled itself before God. Then came a series of extraordinary events: Hitler's halt of the tank advance, weather that limited the Luftwaffe, and unusually calm waters that allowed even small boats to reach the beaches. In the end, more than 338,000 men were rescued.

"My friends, we're living through our own Dunkirk moment economically right now." –Kevin D. Freeman, CFA, D.Sc. (h.c.)

Dunkirk did not end the war. Churchill rightly warned that wars are not won by evacuations. But Dunkirk preserved Britain's ability to continue the fight. The battle for France was over, the battle for Britain was just beginning.

That is the lesson for America's economic moment. Big institutions have limits. Government solutions have limits.

Financial institutions have limits. Political leaders have limits. Like the large British destroyers that could not reach the shallow waters, major institutions cannot always reach the places where action is needed most. That is where ordinary Americans come in.

“You are the little ships. Every time you audit your portfolio and diversify intelligently, every ounce of transactional gold and silver you hold, every dollar you intentionally move into companies strengthening American energy independence, or critical materials, reshoring, defense. Every high-interest debt you eliminate, every time you consult with an NSIC educated advisor, every vote you cast for freedom-loving, free-market candidates, every time you speak up in your community for sound money and sound policy, you’re sailing across the channel.” –Kevin D. Freeman, CFA, D.Sc. (h.c.)

Being one of the little ships does not require being a billionaire, a financial genius, a politician, or a national figure. It means taking faithful, practical action where you are.

It means auditing your portfolio, diversifying intelligently, holding sound money, investing in companies that strengthen American energy, critical materials, reshoring, and defense, eliminating high-interest debt, working with advisors who understand economic warfare, and voting for leaders who support free markets, fiscal responsibility, sound money, lower taxes, reduced regulation, and American energy dominance.

It also means following the right order: prayer first, then work, then thanksgiving. Prayer without action becomes passivity. Action without prayer becomes pride. Gratitude reminds us that victory is not ultimately ours to claim, but ours to steward.

“Prayer first, then get to work. Then give thanks. Even in the middle of the crisis.” — Kevin D. Freeman, CFA, D.Sc. (h.c.)

The call is not to panic. It is not to hoard out of fear. It is not to retreat from public life. The call is to become active economic warriors: men and women of conviction who refuse to surrender the future of their families or their country. Freedom must be protected, fought for, and passed on. That responsibility cannot be outsourced. Every generation must decide whether it will preserve liberty or allow it to be lost through neglect.

Attention: You do not need to be a financial genius to make a difference. America needs ordinary citizens to become the little ships: faithful, courageous, economically informed people who decide to get in the fight, protect their families, and help preserve the republic.
